THE BEAUTIFUL HILLS.

Oh! the beautiful hills where the blasts have trod
Since the years when the earth was new,
Where our fathers gazed from the fields of God,
On the vale we are journeying through;
We have seen those hills in their brightness rise,
When the world was black below,
And we've felt the thrill of immortal eyes,
In the night of our darkest woe.

The cities of yore that were reared in crime,
And renowned by the praise of eers,
Went down in the tramp of old King Time,
To sleep with his grey-haired years;
But the beautiful hills rise bright and strong
Through the smoke of Time's red wars,
As on that day when the first deep song
Rolled up from the morning stars.

We dream of rest on the beautiful hills
Where the traveller shall thirst no more,
And where the hum of a thousand rills
That wander the green vales o'er;
We feel the souls of the martyred men
Who have braved the cold world's frown,
We can bear the burden which they did then,
Nor shrink from their thorny crown.
Our arms are weak, yet we would not fling
To our feet this load of ours;
The winds of Spring to the valleys sing,
And the turf replies with flowers;
And thus we learn on our wintry way
How a mightier arm controls—
That the breath of God on our lives will play
Till our bodies blossom into souls.

FACING THE Foe.—Snakes are some of the most dangerous foes that Europeans have to cope with in the tropics. A traveler of the name of Bailie, one morning startled his companion by the dreadful cry of "A snake! a snake! look!" They all started at him, as he was lying in his hammock, and, to their astonishment, beheld a monstrous serpent twisted around the rope which supported his hammock, with its head at some distance, darting out its forked tongue, and examining him as he lay stretched below. "Lie still," cried the fiscal; "he won't hurt you;" and calling in two or three of the natives, he pointed it out to them. One of these men advancing toward it, caught its eye with his own; the animal now appeared to move its whole body with fear or pleasure. The native stepped backward, without turning the sight of his eye from the fierce orbit of his enemy; and as he kept backing, the snake, with its head steadily advancing, gradually uncoiled his body from the rope round which it was twined. At length its whole body, trailing on the ground, moved slowly along after this colored man—eye fixed upon eye—until a youth, making a dash from behind a bush in an instant flattened the head of this dangerous monster with one blow of his club; and although the body still undulated like the waves of the sea, it was now perfectly harmless.

PARIS.—Of the hundreds of elegant seats put up all over the city for the repose of the public, I have not seen one disfigured by a pen-knife. From one end of town to the other, everywhere the choicest flowers are blooming, with only a barrier a foot high around the beds, and yet not a single plant or flower is ever touched. Paris has become the best lighted city in the world, and soon will be, if it is not already, the best ventilated. Its drainage is nearly perfect. The policemen are not ruffians, but as civil as gentlemen-ushers of the black and white rod. In the most polite and obliging manner all your questions are answered, and every reasonable assistance if you get into a strait. If an Englishman should tumble into a gutter in returning from an evening party, he would be lifted as by the gentle hand of the good Samaritan, and placed upon his own beast.

SIDNEY SMITH tells of a maid who used to boil eggs very well by her master's watch, but one day, as he could not lend it to her because it was under repair, she took the time from the kitchen clock, and the eggs came up nearly raw.

"Why didn't you take the three minutes from the clock as you do from the watch, Mary?"

"Well, sir, I thought that would be too much, as the hands are so much larger."

MADAM, a good many persons at the concert last night were disturbed by the crying of your baby."

"Well, now, I do wonder that such people will go to concerts?"

THE FUR TRADE.—The market for furs is growing quite active at the East. Shipments are occasionally made from this port, and large numbers of furs are brought to this market from Oregon for shipment East. Trapping is also carried on to some extent in the mountains of California. We had an interview, a few days since, with Mr. George Beaman, who, in company with an old trapper by the name of Fisher, has recently returned from a trapping jaunt in the mountains in the vicinity of the Honness Pass. They had been out about three months, and brought in quite a quantity of furs, which were disposed of in this city at the following prices: Black fox, from $40@60; silver grey fox, $20@30; a cross between the two, $8@54; common red red fox, $14; martina $24@4; fisher, $24@8; marten and common valley fox, from 75c@1 each—Mining Press.

The last novelty in the flower world is bouquets made of mother-of-pearl, that sparkle like jewels. The pearly part of the shell is separated in strips as thin as paper, and with the layers trembling out and wheat ears are especially well imitated.
